PATTERN

Chain 65 in Putty, pulling through with Rose on the 65th chain and chaining 65 more in Rose. 130 chains, Chain 2 and turn. (The turning chain does not count as a stitch here or throughout the rest of the blanket.)

HDC in each chain across, pulling through with Putty on the last stitch in Rose, leaving the yarn behind, and not cutting off. You will pick it back up on the return trip. CH 2 and turn.

HDC in each stitch across inserting hook up through front two loops, and pulling through with Rose on the last stitch of Putty. Work Rose across and pull through with Blush on the second to last stitch so the very last front two loop HDC is worked in Blush. CH 2 and turn.

In Blush, work the first two stitches, pulling through with Rose on the 2nd stitch and working across to the putty. Change colors and work across to the end. CH 2 and turn.

Work back across in Putty, changing to Rose, and then making sure you are changing to Blush one stitch early. This will create a diagonal. So now you should have the last 3 stitches in Blush. CH 2 and turn.

Now you are off and running! Work one more in Blush to continue the diagonal, switch to Rose and work to the Putty and switch. Always CH 2 and turn.

All you really have to remember is when you are working toward the Blush, in Rose, switch colors one stitch early, and then on the return trip, work one more in Blush before switching to rose. Keep this consistent and you will see that the colors form a diagonal line.

You know you are done when you have two rose colored stitches left to work. You can stop here. I did, because when I looked at where I started the peach, there seemed to have 2 spaces of rose color before I started the blush. But this is personal preference and if you have enough yarn to continue on and do a few more rows.
